Turn-Taking Conversation Game

Taking turns in conversation and demonstrating interest in what another person is saying is an area that young people with ASC often benefit from some support with. This is a simple game to help with the development of these skills. Extension activities to develop skills further are provided below.

Instructions

- Cut out the question cards overleaf.
- Put them in a pile on the table upside down.
- One person takes a card and the question to the other person and listens to the reply.
- The next person does the same.

Extension activity 1 – involve more people in the game.

Extension activity 2 – ask the person another question related to the answer they gave.

Extension activity 3 – the young person makes some more cards with their own questions on.

Note

The ability of the young person to access this activity depends on their 'Blank Level', refer to the Blank Level information and activity sheet for further information.
